I trust that when the tourists begin to crowd into this valley he may be there to show them what going over a trail really is. Folk who have bragged of riding slowbut-sure mules down into and up out of the Grand Canon, will, after five hours behind Demon Webster, realize that they have been loitering in the kindergarten of thrills, making paper butterflies and playing birdie on the tree. The trail sweeps out of Golden and takes the left bank of the Columbia. Immediately it attacks the mountain side. It goes up. It is just wide enough for the machine. Colonel Webster goes around corners with an airy grace that gives you wonder over what might happen to a for perhaps ten miles. Then...
