

Scottish Airfields: v. 3: Grampians

By Martyn Chorlton

Countryside Books. Paperback. Book Condition: new. BRAND NEW, Scottish Airfields: v. 3: Grampians, Martyn Chorlton, The contribution of Scotland's airfields during the Second World War is sometimes underestimated, or even overlooked completely. Certainly, the aircraft that flew from the thirteen Grampians airfields of Banff, Dallachy, Dyce, East Fingask, Elgin, Fordoun, Forres, Fraserburgh, Kinloss, Lossiemouth, Milltown, Peterhead and Rattray were of crucial importance, keeping the North Sea open to allied ships, and taking the fight to the enemy. Kinloss and Lossiemouth became active in early 1939 and after the outbreak of war Mosquitos and Beaufighters from these airfields roamed the Norwegian coast in the hunt for enemy merchant vessels and airfields. Strike wings operated out of Banff, Callachy and Peterburgh along with Fraserburgh which, along with several other airfields, provided Air-Sea Rescue. During the early months of 1942, several bomber operations were organised in an attempt to sink the German battleship Tirpitz, hiding out in a Norwegian fjord. On 12th November, a force of 30 Lancasters took off from Lossiemouth, each carrying 'Tallboy' bombs. The Tirpitz was hit by at least two bombs on this final attack, one managing to blow up her magazine. All the airfields covered in this volume...
