Not illustrated. 1920 Excerpt: .of nephritis this high protein diet might do considerable harm; this applies to patients with an already existing high nitrogen retention as shown by considerably increased total non-protein or urea nitrogen in the blood. I am quite sure that I have seen uremic manifestations induced by accidental high protein feeding. Fortunately in most patients of this group a diet rich in protein becomes distasteful or induces nausea before much harm is done. On the other hand, the edematous nephritic with fair phthalein excretion and only moderate nitrogen retention usually enjoys the Epstein diet and as no injury from it is apparent, it deserves a trial, provided it is not applied to the case with an existing high blood urea, in the hope that the particular case under observation belongs to the group in which Epstein has obtained such good results. My experience indicates that these are...
